

BASKETEERS WILL OPEN SEASON AT HOME JANUARY 1

Stenos Will Meet Quintet and Also Sextet From Valencia County High School at National Guard Armory.

The "Big Game" basketball season will open on the gridiron of December 31, at least the first game scheduled has been set for that date. The Albuquerque Business College and Valencia County high schoolers and students will meet on the courts, and right for a midweeker.

J. C. Goodrich, manager of the business college, whose New Year's night will be set for the opening, has started off on that name his season and finished successfully. While Manager Goodrich may not be so clever as to pick his men, he is in the right that there is no use risking a chance when you don't know it, at least if the date isn't something to do with it. There won't be any lack following the return crowd this year.

The spectators may be better than two hours' audience can muster and with every game played with them. However, the Valencia countyights are stronger this year. They have already started their season and each team has won the only game it has played.

The first clash will give a cue on the business colleges. Both teams have a large proportion of new material in their rosters. All of the players live and practice although not all of them have played for the business college, therefore.

The teams have been practicing for more than a month and are said to be rounding into splendid form. Two full teams, representing both the boys and girls squads, have turned out for every practice night.

The first game is to be played at the armory. All business college games, played at home, probably will be played there. The college was able to make highly satisfactory arrangements with Capt. J. H. Tolson, who has charge of the building. The captain has had the basketball courts marked off.

The opening games will be followed by a dozen basketball and dancing having proved a popular combination feature.

NEW GAME LICENSES TO BE CANARY YELLOW

SANTA FE, Dec. 12.—The game and fish licenses for 1915-96, to carry yellow, are now ready, with trapping permit and coupon attached. They were manufactured in Albuquerque and will be exchanged for the old license books or rapidly as they are received.

The United States Fish and Game distributed blank forms at the following stations: Albuquerque, 10 cents; Santa Fe, 10 cents for residents; Taos, San Juan and Taosine, 10 cents; Las Vegas, 10 cents for the papago Basin, 7 cents for the Mogollon. How rapidly this multiplying if unbroken is indicated by the fact that two pounds of new-born eels will yield in three years six tons of edible fish valued at $1,000.

CARL O. NEIN FINISHES WITH A PERFECT SCORE

The result of the Motorcycles club's October race, held Sunday, was announced yesterday, after the officials had carefully examined all entrants' cards. Here is Carl O. Nein, Sept. 1, 1910, resident, Harry F. Woldberg, $20; John H. Kuhn, $40; A. M. Dyer, $20; E. McAllister, $10.

Three braces were given to Nein for the winner, a brace to the entrant with the second highest score and a bracelet to the entry with the third highest number of points.

Kilkane Bout Postponed.

Cleveland, Dec. 12.—The ten round bouts between Johnny Kilkane, of Cleveland, and Ritchie Marshall, of Milwaukee, was again postponed yesterday, this time until the afternoon of Saturday, January 3. Kilkane photographed that he was recovering from an attack of acute indigestion and that he could not risk meeting Marshall next Wednesday. The contest was originally scheduled for tonight but owing to Kilkane being ill the day had been changed to next Wednesday.

INCREASING NUMBER OF HARVARD STUDENTS TAKE PART IN SPORTS

AGAINST PLAYERS WHO TAKE PEN IN HAND FOR PAPERS

Babe Johnson to Have Another Try at Stopping This Practice May Settle Cleveland's Affairs.

15,000 TROUT TO BE SET FREE IN NEARBY STREAMS

Alfred Woodruff, president of the American Association, announced yesterday at a luncheon given at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York, that the association will have another try to stop the practice of "pen in hand" for papers. "Now we will see if we can make greater progress than we did in the matter of returning with the plan of discontinuing the practice."

"The idea is without any intention on the part of the members to end the practice. But that will take time."

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand. Paul Morrissey, president of the American Association, has been working to dislodge this practice.

John L. Patterson, president of the American Association, and G. E. Johnson, editor of Game & Fish, have agreed to help him in his efforts to stop the practice.

James R. Bond, of the New York City association, was negotiating for long time against the use of the pen in hand